In the post-civil rights era, people of color slowly entered psychoanalytic training. The first documented African-American graduates of APsA institutes were Margaret Lawrence in 1954 and Ellis Toney in 1958. By 1999, only 26 African-American psychoanalysts were members of the American Psychoanalytic Association (Ruth Fuller, 1999).

Addressing Racism: We believe that as psychoanalysts our shared values include tolerance of difference, seeking emotional truth, empathy and listening, understanding the role of individual and collective trauma, diversity in every sense of the word, and fundamental human equality. We are pleased to announce the formation of The Dorothy Holmes Commission on Racial Equality to lead APsA in addressing racism in our Association and in society.

Addressing Racism - American Psychoanalytic Association

Abstract. Full Text. References. Abstract. Both historically and currently, assaults on the black body and mind have been ubiquitous in American society, posing a counterargument to America as a postracial, color-blind society. Yet the collective silence of psychoanalysts on this societal reality limits our ability to explore, teach, and treat the effects, both interpersonal and intrapsychic, of race, racism, racialized trauma, and implicit bias and privilege.

January 5, 2016Panelists: Dionne Powell, MD and Anton Hart, MD. Since the early 20th century, African Americans have pursued psychodynamic and psychoanalytic training, treatment and application despite tremendous obstacles. We will explore pertinent aspects of that history as relevant to psychoanalysis. Slavery, Jim Crow, explicit and implicit racism continue to affect all Americans as the current racial climate has seen an explosion of injustices toward African-American people, exemplified ...
